From the Southern Literary Messenger. MY POWHATAN PIPE. BY JOHN ESTEN COOKE, ESQ.

You may talk as you please of your snowy Meers chaum—
Of your jewel'd Chibouque, like a lily in bloom—
Of amber-mouthed Hookah, and Narghile fine,
But water they are to the best of good wine, By my Powhatan Pipe.

Tis rude in design, and so dusty and dark, That a star in black midnight 's the glimmering spark
In the grimy old bowl-or the moon in her ring, I'm a poet, you see, and the praises I sing Of my Powhatan Pipe.

smoke only Southside Tobacco, but hold Its perfume more sweet than the pastille of gold You put on your Shiraz or rich Latakie—
It suits not your taste, may be—jet it suits me;
In my Powhatan Pipe.

Sure you know where the honest old pipe had its On the soil of Virginia, the Garden of Earth! She has glittered with jewels the brightest and best.
Above all, she produced—let it stand for the test—

My Powhatan Pipe. Why not? 'Tis the soother of pain and of gloom-Its odor the gardens of Gul in their bloom! Far sweeter than Lubin, or attar of rose

Is the scent of the nosegay that blushes and glows In my Powhatan Pipe. What friend is more true?-am I rich, am I poor? The world may deride me—you smile as before: In sunshine and storm, you are still by my side,

My comfort and solace, my joy and my pride, My Powhatan Pipe. And woman!-alas! 'tis a world full of change: The heart that once loved us, how altered and strange! But no!--she comes forth from the furnace of woe, Doubly strong, doubly pure, with her brave heart a-glow! Like my Powhatan Pipe. My old and true comrade! I give you this song, 'Tis little for one whom I've cherished so long: But take it, and welcome, and ever be near,

My pleasures to heighten, my sorrows to cheer, Honest Powhatan Pipe. And when I am gone from the light of the sun, And history tells of the deeds I have done, Let the pen of the writer declare in the end, "This gentleman never deserted a friend, Or his Powhatan Pipe!"

CHAMPAGNE. We drink more champagne in America than all the rest of the world put together.— Every quality of it is sent here, and almost any quantity without labels, that each dealer may put on what label will best suit his customers, varying the price as he can make it, for it is absolutely within our own knowl edge that we have drank champagne of all prices and all brands at the same table, when hand, a new and beautiful assortment of LADIES' DRESS GOODS, such as Berage, there was but one quality of champagne under all the brands, and that of the most infamous description.

The most popular, and the most reliable champagne wine known in America, has for more than a generation been the Heidseick champagne. More bottles of that brand have been sold in America than of any other. There are three houses in Rheims that make use of the name Heidseick on their corks. The first member of the Heidseick family that established himself at Rheims,
